

[Newspaper clipping titled, Happy with the arrangement] s.e. An Indo-Canadian psychology graduate set out to study whether arranged marriages brought happiness. The results surprised him

Happy Singh and his bride, Rajni (above and below) have been together for decades in a union arranged at the request of the bride's father. Their marriage has been a success. They say, and they believe an arranged marriage is best.

WEEKEND
EXTRA

HAPPY WITH THE ARRANGEMENT

BY NARAYANAN
PHOTOGRAPH BY [unreadable]

Happy Singh set out to study whether arranged marriages brought happiness. The results surprised him. He was a psychology graduate from the University of Toronto and had just landed a job at a university in Ontario. He had a good match for his studies. The results of his study were not what he expected. He found that arranged marriages in the West were not doing people any good. It was just a bad idea. Singh, who is now 38, is the son of a Punjabi immigrant from India. He has been married for 25 years to his wife, Rajni. They met through an arranged marriage. Singh says that he and Rajni have been together for decades in a union arranged at the request of the bride's father. Their marriage has been a success. They say, and they believe an arranged marriage is best.

WEEKEND
EXTRA
CONTINUED ON B2-B5

IDENTIFIER
2022_01_01_04_013